New brand strengthens in-house service line by introducing scientifically based business and trend analyses capacity.

Tech-driven full-service communications agency, TQMPS, has announced the firm's rebrand to TQ Group. This rebrand reflects the company's in-house evolution in its ability to deliver ROI for clients using modern technologies and creative content to provide strategic business communication solutions

TQ MD, Elbé Smith, believes that the additional in-house capacity coupled with the firm's existing ability to deliver content through new technologies across different platforms and different formats perfectly positions TQ to become Africa's leader in content creation and scheduling for digital networks.

"Our vision has been to build in-house capacity to provide the technology, content and research necessary to drive growth for our clients. With the introduction of research and trend analysis capacity to the organisation, we now have a team of experienced professional specialists who can provide a complete solution to both internal and external communication strategies," says Smith.

The company's six-step methodology to identifying and implementing the correct solution for its clients ensures that strategic organisational objectives are met, and that ROI is analysed and measured. This approach underpins TQ's unique full-service product offering which combines analytical problem-solving capabilities and the delivery of ingenious creative solutions, including:
