Praesignis, the data solutions specialist consultancy, is delighted to announce their recent acquisition with the Quenco Group as part of its diversification strategy to move into different sectors of the market.

The Quenco Group was established in 2019 by Quentus Odendaal, after having been in the human capital solutions industry for almost two decades. Their key aim was to serve clients operating within the engineering, power generation, petrochemical and construction sectors, with a core focus on outsourced staffing and contractor management services for artisans (blue-collar skills), on fixed-term projects and limited-duration assignments. Its services also included plant 'shutdown and manpower planning' as well as turn-key HR management solutions.

"After discussions we soon realised that there is major synergy between the two companies and that its matching infrastructure would drive a thriving business in the temporary employment industry," says Johan Ceronio, CEO of Praesignis.

Arrangements were concluded and a new company was established within the Praesignis Group, when Crewsignis was founded.

"We believe that now is the time to expand our business, especially from a risk management point of view. We see this portion of the market as being one of the main sectors that has been affected by Covid-19, but we firmly believe that post-Covid-19 it will also be one of the sectors that will see a huge demand in the temporary staffing and skill solutions," says Johan Ceronio.

Quentus Odendaal has been appointed as Managing Director of Crewsignis and will be looking after its full bouquet of outsourced human capital solutions.

Quentus has over 19 years of experience within the artisanal staffing and HR environment serving blue-chip and SME clients, as well as over 10 years in senior management and EXCO roles.
