Journalist Janice Roberts is taking over the helm of MoneyMarketing magazine, succeeding Patricia Holburn.

Roberts was previously a senior producer at BusinessDay TV. She has been a financial, business and economics writer for the SA Press Association and the I-Net Bridge newswire. Her work has been published in most national newspapers. She was also personal finance editor of the BusinessLive website and editor of Money Week magazine.

Roberts has written about currencies, bonds, equities as well as corporate governance, monetary policy, tax law and investing. She has a keen interest in measures needed to address South Africa's current electricity crisis, as well as solutions to the country's large current account deficit.

Educated at McAuley House in Parktown West, Johannesburg, Roberts studied at the University of the Witwatersrand where she earned a BA Honours degree in International Relations.

"Her experience as well as her knowledge of the financial world makes Janice the perfect editor to take MoneyMarketing into a new era," says Sandra Ladas, publishing manager at New Media.

Roberts says she's looking forward to bringing her ideas and experience to MoneyMarketing.

"I'm determined to preserve MoneyMarketing's status as the investment professional's one-stop shop on all media platforms.

"Readers can rest assured that Patricia's excellent coverage of the latest wealth management news, information and analysis will continue," she adds.
