

Coffee is revving up London buses

Most of us need our coffee to drive us through the day. And now it's also transporting Londoners to work. With a helping hand from Shell, Arthur Kay, founder of Bio-bean, is turning the 200,000 tonnes of coffee grounds the city produces every year into fuel for some of London's famous red buses.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>