

Mark Rosin is Samro's new CEO

The Southern African Music Rights Organisation (Samro) has appointed Mark Rosin as its new CEO. He will commence his duties as CEO from the start of February.

Rosin holds an LLB specialising in corporate, media and entertainment law from the University of the Witwatersrand. His media and entertainment career spans more than three decades, in which he has represented South African and international music industry clients in litigation and commercial matters. As an attorney, he represented music publishers, composers, recording artists, recording companies, live concert promoters and visiting international artists.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>