

Once you've decided what business you are in, now build a brand (Part 1)

By Bogosi Mtshegwa

28 Jun 2018

In South Africa, the idea of entrepreneurship is gaining traction and momentum every day. It has become the new trend for many with the hopes of catapulting their lives into riches, wealth and success. Also, for many, entrepreneurship is a way of escaping the shackles of full-time employment.

© 123RF.com

“According to the GEM 2017/2018 report, total early-stage entrepreneurial activity (TEA) in South Africa is at 11.0%, 4.1 percentage points higher compared to 2016's score of 6.9%. Apart from the country's 4.1 percentage points TEA growth, entrepreneurial intentions have also increased in the last few years to 11.7%, up from 10.1% in 2016/17.” (Business Report, 2018)

According to an article by Brand South Africa, entrepreneurs who start businesses are motivated by various factors, not limited to, but include; 'I wanted to be my own boss' – 22%, 'It makes me happy' – 10% and 'I was unable to find a job' – 4% (Brand South Africa, 2017).

Whilst there are various reasons why people start businesses, business principles still apply. When operating a business, regardless of the scale, one still needs financial management skills, sales, marketing, employees, etc., and these are some of the key principles or pillars of running a successful business.

Prioritise 'brand'

For many businesses, less focus is often placed on 'brand'. Businesses are started or built, but few entrepreneurs prioritise 'brand' as an important aspect to their businesses. Whilst businesses need to create profits, I caution against entrepreneurs solely focusing on selling or sales.

I believe that exponential business success is predicated on a strong brand. A brand that is strong has the ability to increase the perceived value of products or services offered by a company. Why is it that a particular brand can command a higher or premium price, and its competitors can't? For example; Vaseline Men and Nivea Men body lotions (400ml) costs R50+ respectively, whilst Clere For Men body lotion, also 400ml, costs R20+.

What does it mean to be 'cool' and 'relevant' in brand building?

Bogosi Mbotshengwa 14 Jun 2017

Why is this? One can argue about the different approaches employed by the respective companies, but after having conducted a mini-experiment or test on both Vaseline and Clere, the conclusion I landed on is that both these brands have good quality products. If the two brands products that are on par in terms of quality, why does one brand cost so much? It's simple; it all boils down to the power (or lack thereof) of a brand and how each company chooses to position itself against the market players.

Brands become successful not because of what they sell, but the attractiveness of the brand and the perceived value.

By focusing on building a brand, business growth is inevitable. This is not to say that other factors may not influence either the success or failure – nothing works in isolation, but regardless of the external influences, having a strong and powerful brand with good equity is always a plus. A strong brand gives people a reason to buy, a reason to choose your brand over what is available, a reason to pay more. A 'brand' makes up for what logic fails to encapsulate.

Virgin brand

Virgin was born out of frustration (see what I did there?). When the Virgin brand was launched, the different ventures that Richard Branson got into were not necessarily new ideas, they were ventures in existing industries that he made us think differently about. He started Virgin Records, a record label, Virgin Active, Virgin Galactic and Virgin Trains in other countries. What all these ventures have in common is the brand 'Virgin' or brand Richard. The brand is irreverent and that's exactly what makes it different and attractive. It is more than what it 'sells'.

Apple brand

Experts and those who understand the technical aspects of technology and what goes into making computers, will tell you that Apple products aren't necessarily superior to HP, IBM and or Samsung respectively, but the perception is that Apple is way better. In business, perception is everything. These positive perceptions around Apple can be linked to 'brand' and 'purpose'. Apple doesn't make computers and other technologies because it has the capabilities, but rather because it has a higher reason for being. Their adverts and brand building efforts highlight this purpose. Which is why their pay-off line says; 'Think Different'.

MoFaya brand

Dj Sbu and MoFaya are a classic South African case study for building a business premised on a 'brand'. MoFaya is not just an energy drink, it is an energy drink for the Hustlers. DJ Sbu calls it; 'iColdrink yase Kasi' (Coldrink for the township). By packaging or articulating it in that manner, MoFaya all of a sudden becomes more than just an energy drink.

The list of brands that are bigger in terms of value and perception is endless; Toyota, VW, DStv, Nike, Adidas, McDonald's, KFC, etc.

What should entrepreneurs care about?

In a study completed, entrepreneurs identified the following as their biggest challenges (Brand SA, 2017):

- Finding clients or customers (47%);
- Inability to raise funds (43%);
- Lack of guidance (31%);
- Wearing too many hats (30%); and
- Slow or lost sales (21%).

What the above highlight is a covert revelation of lack of time and effort spent on building a brand.

To be continued... Part two coming soon.

ABOUT BOGOSI MOTSHEGWA

Bogosi Mtshegwa is a strategic planner at Thinkerneur, a brand strategy consulting firm and is Advisory Council Member at Vega School of Design | Brand | Business. He is a brand consultant who specialises in but is not limited to, brand, digital and communication strategy.

- Once you've decided what business you are in, now build a brand (Part 2) - 3 Jul 2018
- Once you've decided what business you are in, now build a brand (Part 1) - 28 Jun 2018

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>